- C) by learning to be accountable for their actions and decisions
- D) by delaying entry into the navy until they are older
- 4. For Peter, what is the most rewarding part of a trip back to his hometown?
- A) Receiving respect from people he studied with.
- B) Experiencing a sense of pride in his achievements.
- C) Relating his experiences to younger members of the community.
- D) Hearing that other people have followed his example.
- 5. According to Peter, what do the public not understand about the navy?
- A) The range of roles that the navy undertakes.
- B) The length of time that navy personnel spend at sea.
- C) The dangers that navy personnel have to face.
- D) The amount of money required to run the organization properly.
- 6. According to Peter, what advantage does a previous naval career give job seekers?
- A) A sense of self-reliance in their own ability.
- B) The discipline for later academic study.
- C) The determination to succeed in their work.
- D) Experience which can be transferred to other fields.

For questions 7-8 complete the sentences using 1 word from the recording. Transfer your answers to the answer sheet.

- 7. The navy decide to use ... to raise awareness of what they are actually doing for the society.
- 8. Peter thinks it a good idea to record a ... in order to raise public awareness of what they are really doing for the society.

For questions 9-10 decide whether the following statements are True (A), False (B) or Not Stated (C). Transfer your answers to the answer sheet.

- 9. Unless Peter had opted for the naval career he would have made an average soldier.
- 10.Peter has been in the navy for a decade already.

Is Kieron Britain's most exciting artist?

Peter Stanford watches an amazing seven-year-old artist at work.

All the time we are talking, Kieron Williamson is busy sketching on the pad in front of him with quick, fluid movements of his pencil. He is copying from a book of pen and ink illustrations by Edward Seago, the twentieth-century British artist, before he adds touches of his own to the sketches.

Kieron is clearly caught up in what he is doing, his blonde head a study in concentration as he kneels in the front room of his family home. But he's not so distracted that he doesn't sometimes look me in the eye and put me right. "You've added a bit more details here", I say, as he is reproducing Seago's sketch of an old man in an overcoat. "Seago's", I explain, "is lighter." "Not lighter," Kieron corrects me. "You call it looser. Loose and tight. They're the words." Seven-year-olds don't often give adults lessons in the terminology of fine art.

Kieron actually can and does, and has been hailed as "mini-Monet", on account of his neo-Impressionist style, or the next Picasso. Recently, buyers from as far afield as South Africa and America queued up outside his modest local art gallery - some of them camping out all night - to snap up 33 paintings in just 27 minutes, leaving Kieron £150,000 better off. How did it feel? "Very nice," he replies politely. "Did you talk to any of the buyers?" "Yes, they kept asking me what else I do." "And what did you tell them?" "That I go to school, that I play football for my school and that I am the best defender in the team."

His exhibition - the second to sell out so quickly – has brought him a lot of attention. Several American TV networks have filmed him in the family flat already and today a camera crew is squeezed into the front room with me, Kieron's mum, Michelle, his younger sister, Billie-Jo, and two sleeping cats.

"These are ones I did last night when I was watching the television with Billie-Jo," he says, handing me a sketchbook. It falls open on a vibrant fairground scene. Kieron finds the page in the Seago book that inspired him. There is the same carousel, but he has added figures, buildings and trees in his drawing in the sketchbook.

As accomplished as Kieron's paintings are, part of their appeal is undoubtedly the story of precocious talent that goes with them. If he's doing similar work when he's 28, it may prompt a different reaction.

But Kieron is having none of it. He looks up sharply from his sketching. "If I want to paint," he says, "I'll paint."

Α	An example is his pastel Figures at Holkham , an accomplished composition with big blue skies, a line of sand, dunes framing to either side and two figures, one with a splash of red in the centre to draw the eye in. There is such an adult quality to his work that you can't help wondering if someone older has been helping him.
В	Standard seven-year-old boy stuff there. Kieron, however, is being hailed as a child prodigy. "They only come along once in a generation" artist Carol Pennington tells me later, as she explains how she helped nurture this early-blooming talent, " and Kieron is that one."
С	Michelle Williamson is aware of this. "I fully expect Kieron in a few years' time to focus on something else as closely as he is focusing on art right now", she says. "Football or motor racing. There may well be a lot more ahead for him than art."
D	Yet, in the centre of the melee, Kieron seems utterly oblivious and just gets on with what he does every day, often rising at 6 a.m. to get on to paper a picture that is bursting to get out of his head. He will be painting every day of the school holidays, relishing the freedom denied him during term time.
E	Each one takes him only a few minutes - horses, figures huddling in a tent, men and women in unusual costumes. "I'm going to do this one, then this one, then this one," he tells me, "but not this one - the eyes aren't looking at anyone - or this one – it's too messy."

F	This, it is clear, is no mechanical exercise in reproduction. To underline the point, Kieron takes it back off me and adds a smudge of dark under one of the groups of people.
G	But then Kieron Williamson is not your average boy. Aside from his
U	precocious articulacy, he is single-handedly illustrating that familiar remark, made by many a parent when confronted with a prize-winning work of

Kit Man

Gadgets that bring home comforts to the great outdoors have given rise to a new breed of outdoor adventurer. But purists are unconvinced.

Up there, in the clear fresh air, it isn't just the stars that are glowing. You can A climb a mountain and find at the top of it a nightmare of hi-tech gadgetry and hardship-avoidance devices. Worried about getting lost? Relax with a handheld GPS unit, featuring 3D and aerial display, plus built-in compass and barometric altimeter. Even the sacred covenant between outdoor types and wet socks has come unravelled with the development of 'hydrophobic' fabrics which repel all moisture. At next month's Outdoors Show in Manchester, all this kit and more will be on display for an audience which seemingly can't get enough of it. 'When we ask people what they come to the show for, they list two things,' says the event's sales manager, Geff Simons. 'One is the inspiration to get outdoors in the first place. And the other is to see the new gear, the gadgets, the breakthroughs. That's what they love.' The event, the showcase of Britain's booming adventure business shows everything the techsavvy adventurer could wish for, from solar-heated sleeping bags to remotecontrolled lanterns.

B The rise of Kit Man, as the gizmo-fixated menace of the 21st century mountains has been christened, reflects both changing social trends and the dizzying speed of scientific advance. Modern hikers have moved on from the Spartan routines of 50 years ago, when discomfort, bad food and danger were seen as part of the authentic outdoor experience. They also have more money and a conditioned attachment to life's luxuries. However, basic pioneering disciplines —map-reading, camp-laying, First Aid — have declined, to be shakily replaced by the virtual skills offered by technology. With so much gear now available, Kit Man and his kind stand accused by the old-schoolers of being interested only in reaching the summits of gadgetry.

C 'I think these people are completely missing the point,' huffs author and TV presenter Guy Grieve, who spent a year living alone in the Alaskan wilderness. The whole idea of going into the wild is to get away from the things that tie you in knots at home. I'd prefer to take as little as possible — a tent, a rifle, and a few pots and pans. All this technology, I mean, it might look fantastic on paper, but when there's a real problem, it's almost certainly going to let you down. What will see you through is the old stuff, the maps and the bits of rope. There are times when you need that kind of dependability. Who'd want to be stranded out in the wild with a gadget freak?' Travel and adventure writer Clive Tully agrees. 'Be suspicious of anything that claims to make your life easier,' he warns. 'My experience is that people who depend on technology are woefully ill-prepared in other ways. You still need to be able to read a map and do the basic stuff.'

- D None of which is enough to keep Kit Man from his toys. The mountains and hills are alive with the sound of ringing mobiles, beeping biometric pressure metres, clicking ultra-violet radiation sensors and the whirring of the current ultimate in gadget chic a micro-helicopter which can be controlled from an iPod to send back live pictures of the route ahead. Thus tooled up, Kit Man must consider what he is to wear. And as any visit to a contemporary outdoor store shows, this involves not only acquiring new clobber, but new jargon. When he asks about a pair of trousers, he will learn about Moisture Vapour Transfer Rate, Hydrostatic Heat Resistance and Wickability. He'll be told that the vest he's interested in is fitted with a particular membrane, and that the boots which caught his eye have a built-in air-conditioning system with advanced longitudinal flex and heel-to-toe shock absorbers.
- E It is tempting to scoff at Kit Man, but not everyone sides with the romantics. Many in the adventure business say gadgets have encouraged thousands who would otherwise not have ventured into the great outdoors. Evidence from the American market also suggests that technology has had a positive environmental impact, and increased safety standards. Then there's research from Germany's Institute for Biological Cybernetics, which suggests that, left to their own devices, humans are doomed to wander round in circles. 'We cannot trust our own senses,' says its director Dr Jan Souman. The déjà vu that you feel when you are lost in the woods is real. The brain will bring you back to where you started.'

The sky's the limit for cloudwatchers

Christopher Middleton learns to distinguish an altostratus from a cirrus at Britain's first Cloud Bar.

High above the Lincolnshire coastline, a swirl of small white clouds moves slowly across a clear blue sky. In normal circumstances, you'd describe them as wispy and feathery. But because we're standing on the roof of Britain's first Cloud Bar, and it's decked out with wall charts, we assembled skygazers can identify the abovementioned phenomena as Cirrus fibratus. For the moment anyway, since clouds only live for ten minutes (it says on the chart).

"It's a fantastic idea, this place," says off-duty fireman Peter Ward, who's brought his young family here. "Really inspiring."

At the last count, membership of the Cloud Appreciation Society stood at 23,066, covering 82 nations and all kinds of sky-watchers from hill-walkers to airline pilots. "We think that clouds are nature's poetry," says the society's founder Gavin Pretor-Pinney, author of The Cloudspotter's Guide (sales of 200,000 and still rising). "Clouds are for dreamers and their contemplation benefits the soul."

"In fact, you don't really need to travel at all to see interesting clouds. You can just lie in your back garden and look upwards," he says. For many cloud watchers, the most important factor is not so much geographical location, as your philosophical disposition.

"That said, clouds can be tremendously exciting too," he adds. "The first cloud I noticed was at the age of four and a half. I saw this magnificent Cumulonimbus, with rays of sunshine sprouting out from behind. Even now, I love to see those towering great formations. In my mind, clouds are the last great wilderness available to us."

Cloud spotters in search of similar experiences flock each autumn to North Queensland in Australia for the tube-shaped phenomenon known as Morning Glory. "You go up and surf the wave of air it creates," says Gavin Pretor-Pinney, whose follow-up book is The Wavewatcher's Companion. "Even more thrilling is to travel through clouds on a hang-glider. The strange thing is, you put your hand inside a cloud, but although it's wet and chilly, there's no actual substance to it."

There's something about clouds which appeals to the soul, Ian Loxley says. "The line I like best is the one that goes, "Life is not measured by the number of breaths you take, but by the moments that take your breath away."

Α	Gavin Pretor-Pinney explains why this is: "Because of the stately way in which clouds move and the gradual rate at which they develop, contemplating them is akin to meditation," he says. "The mere act of sitting, watching and observing slows you down to their pace."
В	Absolutely. And as well as stimulating the imagination, clouds get you out and about. The keeper of the Society's photo gallery, Ian Loxley, has been on cloud-seeking expeditions in places as far afield as Cornwall and Canada, though his favourite location is around his home in the Lincolnshire Wolds.
С	The Cloud Appreciation Society website is full of reports of such encounters. Some, like that one, are in mid-air at close quarters, while others are miles below on the ground.
D	Alto clouds are a good example. They are primarily made up of water droplets, making them appear as grey puffy masses. If you see these on a humid summer morning, watch out for a potential thunderstorm later.
E	Yes, spend an hour here and you become an instant expert on telling your altos (four to six miles high) from your cumulos (anything lower). As for these, they don't start until eight miles up, and they're identifiable because of their long, thin, shape (the name in Latin means a strand of hair).
F	And, like all such places, humans want to explore them. Glider pilot Mike Rubin not only flies inside clouds but rides on them. "You fly underneath, find the thermal lift that is generating this cloud, and climb up by circling inside it," he says. "Use the thermals, and on a good day, you can travel hundreds of kilometres.
G	Other beachgoers aren't as convinced that the country has been crying out for a purpose-built pavilion like this, equipped with adjustable mirrors so that you don't even have to look up at the sky. But the world's nephelophile community (that's cloud enthusiasts) would beg to differ, especially now that more changeable autumn weather offers fewer cloudless bluesky scenarios, and lots more action of the scudding and billowing kind.

Activities for visitors to Norway

Norway offers some truly remarkable ways to explore the great outdoors.

A Ride a snowmobile
 For many who live in Northern Norway, the snowmobile is an everyday means of transport — and nothing less than a lifeline for those in more remote areas. But these vehicles are also great fun to ride and snowmobile excursions are one of the most popular tourist experiences. It's a thrill indeed to roar in convoy through a landscape of wooded trails on the Arctic's answer to a Harley-Davidson motorbike. Anyone with a driving licence for a car may operate one and the basics are easily mastered. The only controls to worry about are a thumb-operated throttle and motorcycle-style brakes. All riders are kitted out with a helmet, warm waterproof overalls, boots and gloves, and given a comprehensive safety briefing. Scores of outfits throughout the region offer snowmobile excursions, from half-day taster sessions to expeditions of up to a week.

B Go fishing on a frozen surface

Fishing through a hole in the ice may seem like the ultimate Arctic cliché. Many people from Europe's warmer climes may think it is something that exists only in old footage of Eskimo living, but this isn't the case at all. Under the frozen surface, many of Norway's freshwater lakes and fjords are teeming with fish and there are plenty of enthusiasts who devote their days to catching them. Sign up for an excursion and you'll find out how the experts use the auger to drill through the ice, a skimming loop to keep the water from freezing over again and a familiar rod to catch the fish. There's something magical about seeing a tug on the line and a sparkling fish being suddenly whisked out of the icy depths. Some companies offer fishing trips lasting three days or more, involving snowmobile or dog-sled journeys up to remote mountain lakes.

C Go skiing or snowshoeing

Snowmobiling has high-octane attractions, but to appreciate fully the stillness and peace of the mountains, it's best to use your own feet to get around. There are several ways of doing this. Cross-country skiing is among the most popular Nordic pastimes and there are thousands of miles of trails. A few lessons are essential to pick up the rudiments of the technique. After that, you will discover that gliding around the snowy terrain is not just a great way of getting close to nature, but also fantastic aerobic exercise. Younger explorers will find plenty of opportunities for snowboarding fun. A more sedate manner of exploration (though still invigorating) is on snowshoes. The racquet-like footwear makes it possible to yomp over deep snow. A classic snowshoe safari involves a guided walk to a forest glade where snacks are served.

D Try dog sledding

Before the invention of the petrol engine, dog sleds were vital to those who lived inside the Arctic circle, and a trip to a husky farm is something every visitor to northern Norway should experience. Half- or full-day sled safaris are most popular, although overnight and longer tours are also available. Norwegians treat dog sledding as a sport and regularly take part in prestigious races. It's difficult not to feel a frisson of excitement as a team of huskies is harnessed to your sledge. The instinct to run is so strongly bred into the dogs that whenever they realise an outing is imminent, they become as keyed up as domestic pets about to be taken for walkies — howling, leaping in the air and straining at their leashes. When the signal is given to depart, you may well be surprised at the speed that they can reach. Dog sledding is available through various companies at different locations in northern Norway and is suitable for novices, though you should be reasonably fit.

E | Bathe in the Barents Sea

The Barents Sea is the part of the Arctic Ocean that lies north of Norway and Russia, and although the North Atlantic Drift keeps it ice-free through the year, its temperature seldom rises much above freezing point. So it might be imagined that bathing in the frigid waters would be at best crazy, but with the right equipment you can take a dip off the coast of Finnmark. You'll first need to be sealed into a bright orange survival suit, which leaves only the face exposed and lends bathers a rather peculiar appearance. These provide heavy insulation and buoyancy, allowing you to float and paddle around to your heart's content. In Kirkenes, bathing in the Barents Sea is often combined with a king crab safari — the experience bringing new meaning to the phrase 'cold appetizer'.

2.2.2. Устный тур

2.2.2.1. Английский язык

Student 1

You have 5 minutes to get ready.

Make a monologue on the following:

Although the vast majority of educators dress in professional outfits for the classrooms and schools where they work, some schools are introducing dress code policies for school employees. Do teachers really need dress codes to wear at school? What's your opinion?

Remember:

- 6. You are the first to speak.
- 7. You have 1,5-2 minutes to speak.
- 8. Express your opinion, give reasons and be convincing.
- 9. After you finish, your partner will ask you 2 questions.
- 10.Listen to your partner and ask him/her 2 questions which have not been covered by his/her monologue.

Student 2

You have 5 minutes to get ready.

Make a monologue on the following:

A traditional school requires you to attend classes in person. However, these days there's a lot of buzz about online education. The virtual classroom used to be a thing of the future, but we are beginning to see online courses and even entire virtual schools become the norm. Would you like to have all your classes online? Why/why not?

Remember:

- 6. Listen to your partner and ask him/her 2 questions which have not been covered by his/her monologue.
- 7. Present your monologue.
- 8. You have 1,5-2 minutes to speak.
- 9. Express your opinion, give reasons and be convincing.
- 10.After you finish, your partner will ask you 2 questions.

Критерии оценивания

Содержание - максимум 10 баллов

Баллы
10-9	Учащемуся успешно удалось создать законченное, логичное монологическое высказывание, в котором он выразил свое отношение к поставленной проблеме.
