Задания № 16 – 20

Прочитайте приведенный ниже текст и выполните задания № 16 – 20 после него.

It was a typically cold and damp night in Manchester where I had recently started my undergraduate degree in English and American literature in 2009. I woke up at about 3 a.m. in a confused panic about a decision I had recently made to study abroad in Paris. The stream of fantasies that had been flowing through my mind for weeks had suddenly stopped. Where would I wash my clothes? Where would I buy my contact lenses? As the time got closer and closer, the visions of wandering around Paris like a character out of Ernest Hemingway's A Moveable Feast or a Jean-Luc Godard film had gone away, replaced by a mix of nerves and anxiety. I ultimately decided not to study abroad for a year and it was a conclusion I almost immediately regretted.

Ever since that fateful week spent in my shoebox-sized dorm room playing games of 'Fifa 10' and watching obscure art-house films to impress people, I made a promise to myself. If I ever got even the chance to take part in a similar exchange abroad, I would grasp it with both hands. Eight long years later, I have finally realised my 19-year-old's ambition to work in Europe, with a teaching position in Luebeck, Germany. Throughout that time, having completed my MA degree in 2016, I went from job to job in England, not being particularly happy in any one position. In those times it felt as if things would never really change.

The advice I would give to any young person who is perhaps overthinking whether or not to work or study abroad is to just do it! Unfortunately our lives aren't rehearsals and, even though I was lucky enough to get a second chance, opportunities to travel, explore and embrace the world can be few and far between. The number of new friends, exposure to different cultures, and new experiences I have already got in just one month in Germany have been incredible and have made an impact on my life. Don't be like me, mournfully watching Amélie whilst staring into the Manchester rain. Go and live the adventurous life you dream about.

Прочитайте приведенный ниже текст и выполните задания №16 – 20 после него.

If you'd told me a year ago that I'd soon be living in a city with a pleasantly hot climate all year round, I imagine I'd have been overjoyed at the prospect of leaving the gloomy weather of my hometown in Scotland. Although, if you'd mentioned I would be living in a country with no seasons, I might have reacted differently. Before moving to Colombia, I was aware that the climate would be very different from what I was used to. I anticipated less rain, less wind and a lot more sun. Each of these predictions turned out to be correct, as the city in which I currently live, Bucaramanga, has a more or less perfect climate. Isn't this the dream? Being able to leave the house without a jacket, and not requiring a different wardrobe for each month of the year? Initially I thought so.

I'm certainly not missing the torrential rain and gale force winds which are typical of British weather. However, the dependable sunshine and heat in this city draw my attention to the lack (or sheer non-existence) of changing seasons. A beautiful cycle which once to me seemed so ordinary and mundane.

With the festive season soon approaching, I can't deny that I'm longing to be wrapped up on a crisp autumn day just as I was this time last year. I recently found this longing of mine perfectly illustrated through a poem written by Rupi Kaur which she titled 'Unappreciative'. The poem uses the seasons as a metaphor for essentially always wanting what you don't have. I'm pretty certain that if I was still sitting in my university library in Scotland right now, I'd be wishful of a life in Colombia, which for so long was my dream. And now here I am, longing to see familiar piles of leaves dyed burgundy and amber just as I know there are back home.

Having the luxury of experiencing life in two completely different parts of the world leaves room for comparison, and feelings which could be considered 'unappreciative'. Along with these feelings also comes the need to accept that as much as you love one thing, there will always be parts of you that long for something else. After all, being able to appreciate the value of something which is now absent will only make you more appreciative when it returns.
