I was taken aback when the woman who was blocking my path said, “Hello, Kate. How are you?” The fact that I was disconcerted must have registered on my face, as she added, “It’s Enid – Enid Goldthorpe as was. You haven’t changed one iota since school. I’d have recognised you anywhere.”

Now as we had left school twenty eight years earlier, it was beyond my comprehension that I hadn’t altered – it certainly didn’t appear to me that way whenever I glanced in the mirror and saw the bags under my eyes, the double-chin and sagging jowls. I peered at her and it dawned at me who she was. I was transfixed by the difference. It was at least fifteen years since we’d last met. Then she’d looked great but now, well, she looked incredible.

As it was freezing cold we decided to go somewhere with surroundings more conducive to catching up on old times. As we walked briskly down a side street, I reminisced mentally about our school days. Then Enid had been nondescript and average at everything, just plodding along with no close friends.

In retrospect, I shouldn’t really have been surprised by yet another change in Enid. The previous time I’d bumped into her, she had already accomplished a complete metamorphosis from school girl to successful business woman. With her exceptional beauty, her well-cut hair, her expensive clothes and understated elegance, I should have realised that she had yet further potential. She’d definitely ditched her school uniform with a vengeance.

Enid ordered lemon tea and launched into an account of her lifestyle. I listened with horror and by the time she got to her third husband, I had stopped listening to her entirely. How had such a self-effacing teenager turned into this brash, self-indulgent, strident woman? What was that last remark?

“I occasionally descend on some charity or other like Lady Bountiful and dole out some of my husband’s money. I married him for his financial means and he married me for my looks. All he has to do is stay rich and keep me in the style to which I have become accustomed and all I need to do is stay beautiful. The arrangement works well.”

Later I sat in the back of a taxi and thought about our conversation. We had arranged to keep in touch but I knew we never would. We weren’t just moving in different worlds – we were on totally different planets and had nothing in common. People change as they mature but I’d never before seen such mutation in a person’s character. It made me feel a little complacent about my own life. I might not be anywhere near as attractive or rich as Enid but I loved my husband, we had a nice home – just the one, of course – and I enjoyed my job. Enid hadn’t asked one question about me, just prattled on about herself. I could never imagine myself marrying for money. In any case, we were quite well off thanks to my husband’s last book so money was the least of our concerns. I definitely knew who would have the merrier Christmas and it wouldn’t be my friend Enid.

A She could not control her desires.
B She had become confident in a selfish way.
C She was still as modest as she always had been.
D She had not been warned in advance.
- 4 What characterises Enid`s attitude towards charity work?
A Generosity but no goodwill.
B An air of commitment.
C Personal ambition.
D A sense of duty.
- 5 The writer differs from Enid in that she is
A able to enjoy Christmas more.
B content with her simple existence.
C uninhibited by a lack of money.
D smug about her own life.

If the Metcalfes had known exactly what they were admitting into their family through this marriage, they would have barred their doors and windows and locked their precious son in the attic out of harm`s way.

Of course, no one was really good enough for Daniel. Not one of his previous girlfriends had come up to scratch, but then his mother had her eye on him marrying royalty, which was a totally unrealistic expectation and should give an idea of what a doting mother she was.

Mr and Mrs Metcalfes weren`t very keen on their new daughter-in-law but Daniel was besotted by Emily and for once he went against his mother`s wishes and insisted on marrying her. It wasn`t very often that Daniel put his foot down, but when he did his determination was awesome to behold.

Nobody could deny that Emily was an attractive girl. Slim, blonde hair and huge brown eyes. She also had a beautiful smile which showed off her perfectly even white teeth and she was using it to full effect at the wedding reception, charming all the guests. Everybody congratulated Daniel on his good luck at finding such a `smashing` woman.

For her part, Emily, which was not her real name, was assessing everyone and everything, filing it away mentally for future use. This was her fourth marriage, though needless to say, everyone, including her new husband, was unaware of this fact and thought her a sweet innocent young thing. She was also very wealthy, having killed her three previous husbands who were all quite rich and had, at her insistence, taken out very large insurance policies on their life. She pleaded poverty to Daniel and his parents, so they had paid all the expenses for the big day, including her dress. She had also informed them she was an orphan – she actually had two healthy and very much alive parents, two sisters and a brother, who she`d had nothing to do with for years, considering them socially beneath her.

Emily was very contented with how things were working out. She didn`t think Daniel had much promise when they first met, particularly when she`d seen his domineering mother. But Daniel had ignored his parents objections. Now they were married and she was safe. She only needed to stay with this ridiculous family for two to three years and she`d have their money to add to her fortune. She reckoned one more marriage after this and she could `retire` from the whole business and relax. She constantly had to be on her toes so as not to slip up as `accidental deaths` required a lot of meticulous planning.

Unbeknown to Emily though, her `career` was about to come to an abrupt and unscheduled end. One of the guests, Detective Inspector Dawson, knew exactly who she was. He had been a friend of her first husband and had always been suspicious about the circumstances of his death, even though he had been unable to prove anything at the time. He had quietly watched her over the past six years and now had all the proof he needed. He waited until the bride and groom had greeted all the guests and approached Emily, real name Avril, murderer of three, with a warrant for her arrest.

READING

As the summer drew to a close I found myself, to my delight, once more without a tutor. Mother had discovered that, as she so delicately put it, Margo and Peter were becoming 'too fond of one another'. As the family was unanimous in its disapproval of Peter as a prospective relation by marriage, something obviously had to be done.

Leslie's only contribution to the problem was to suggest shooting Peter, a plan that was, for some reason, greeted derisively. I thought it was a splendid idea, but I was in the minority. Larry's suggestion that the happy couple should be sent to live in Athens for a month, in order, as he explained, to get it out of their systems, was quashed by Mother on the grounds of immorality.

Eventually Mother dispensed with Peter's services, he left hurriedly and furtively and we had to cope with a tragic, tearful and wildly indignant Margo, who, dressed in her most flowing and gloomy clothing for the event, played her part magnificently. Mother soothed and uttered gentle platitudes, Larry gave Margo lectures on free love, and Leslie, for reasons best known to himself, decided to play the part of the outraged brother and kept appearing at intervals, brandishing a revolver and threatening to shoot Peter down like a dog if he set foot in the house again. In the midst of all this Margo, tears trickling effectively down her face, made tragic gestures and told us her life was blighted. Spiro, who loved a good dramatic situation as well as anyone, spent his time weeping in sympathy with Margo, and posting various friends of his along the docks to make sure that Peter did not attempt to get back on to the island. We all enjoyed ourselves very much. Just as the thing seemed to be dying a natural death, and Margo was able to eat a whole meal without bursting into tears, she got a note from Peter saying he would return for her. Margo, rather panic-stricken by the idea, showed the note to Mother, and once more the family leapt with enthusiasm into the farce.

Spiro doubled his guard on the docks, Leslie oiled his guns and practised on a large cardboard figure pinned to the front of the house, Larry went about alternately urging Margo to disguise herself as a peasant and fly to Peter's arms, or to stop behaving like Camille. Margo, insulted, locked herself in the attic and refused to see anyone except me, as I was the only member of the family who had not taken sides. She lay there, weeping copiously, and reading a volume of Tennyson; occasionally she would break off to consume a large meal – which I carried up on a tray - with undiminished appetite.
