Who was Columbus?

Columbus was an explorer. In 1492, he sailed from Europe to America. He and his sailors crossed the Atlantic Ocean, not knowing where they would land. It was a voyage into the unknown. After Columbus, other Europeans began to explore and settle in America.

Christopher Columbus was born in 1451. It was a time of new ideas and discoveries in Europe. We call this time the Renaissance — a word that means "rebirth". People were making maps of new lands. They were building ships to explore places they had never visited before. Columbus did not "discover" America. There were many people already living there. And even vikings from Europe had landed in America 500 years before. But Columbus did not know that. His voyage started regular contact between America and Europe.

Columbus sailed to Cuba and Hispaniola. He explored a world new to Europeans. People later called it the New World.

On Christmas night 1492 the Santa Maria was wrecked. It hit a reef. The other two ships sailed home. Columbus left 40 men behind. He took some captive Native Americans with him. He landed in Spain in March 1493. Columbus soon went back to rescue his men. This time, he took 17 ships. But all the men left behind were dead.

People from Europe sailed to America to start colonies. Some wanted to make the Native Americans become Christians. The Europeans began treating the Native Americans badly. They made many of them work as slaves.

Columbus sailed to America for the fourth time in 1502. He was still hoping to land in China. This time he explored Central America. His ships were too leaky to sail home, so he had to wait a year before being rescued.

Galileo

Galileo was born in Pisa, Italy where he grew up with his brothers and sisters during the Italian Renaissance. His father was a music teacher and a famous musician. His family moved to the city of Florence when he was ten years old. It was in Florence that Galileo began his education at the Camaldolese monastery.

Galileo was an accomplished musician and an excellent student. At first, he wanted to become a doctor, so he went to the University of Pisa to study medicine in 1581.

While at university, Galileo became interested in physics and mathematics. One of his first scientific observations was with a lamp hanging from the ceiling in the cathedral. He noticed that despite how far the lamp swung, it took the same amount of time to swing back and forth. This observation didn't agree with the common scientific principles of the day.

In 1585, Galileo left the university and got a job as a maths teacher. He began to experiment with pendulums, levers, balls, and other objects. He tried to describe how they moved using mathematical equations. He even invented an advanced measuring device called the hydrostatic balance.

Galileo wanted to test the scientific principles and see if he could observe them in the real world. This was a new concept to the people of his time and laid the foundation for the scientific method.

One of the traditional beliefs was that if you dropped two items of different weights, but the same size and shape, the heavier item would land first. Galileo tested this idea by going to the top of the Leaning Tower of Pisa. He dropped two balls of the same size, but different weights. They landed at the same time!

Galileo's experiments made some people angry, however. They didn't want the traditional views to be questioned. In 1592, Galileo moved from Pisa to the University of Padua, where he was permitted to experiment and discuss new ideas.

In 1609, Galileo decided to build his own telescope. He made great improvements to the telescope and began to use it to view the planets. Galileo made many discoveries using his telescope including the four large moons around Jupiter and the phases of the planet Venus. He also discovered sunspot and learned that the Moon was not smooth, but was covered with craters.
